G-Spot amplification/the G-Shot disclaimers and no warranties

The g-spot amplification clinical investigational study showed that 87% of women receiving the g-shot reported enhanced sexual arousal and gratification. thirteen percent of women (13%) showed no effect. if you are in this 13% and show no effect or the desired effect, then no further injections will be given (i.e. free additional injections). The G-Shot services and programs featured or offered, promoted, or published in web pages, books, newsletters, articles, reports, emails or magazines make absolutely no promises, implications, promises, suggestions or guarantees whatsoever that in any manner of speaking, in whole or in part, that by having the g-shot procedure, following or adhering to any program, product, service or information that you will achieve specific results. If you request to have the G-Spot procedure performed on you, you understand that your procedures is "at your own risk". Your success in these or any efforts depends on numerous factors typical or atypical of most pursuits.

The filler, (name of filler), used for the G-Spot amplification procedure is a FDA cleared product for medical use. The filler is not cleared by the FDA for the G-Spot amplification procedure.

The 87% success rate of g-spot amplification, patient statements and examples are not intended to represent, promise or guarantee that you will achieve the same results. Individual results will vary from those shown, whether implied or stated. There is no guarantee your postoperative results will duplicate the results stated in the G-Spot study discussed in this document, and you recognize that any medical procedure has inherent risks.

I, _____,(printed name of patient) have read and understand the above information in this document and agree to have the Gshot procedure performed on myself by doctor, _____(doctor name).

_____ _____

SIGNATURE OF PATIENT DATE